What
did I know?

Tepic—Nayarit,
Ixtlán,

Ixcuintla. Where was I?
The Huichol smoke.

Coras
in Bogart hats awaiting blessings from Big Al to hand them agricultural prowess, a drop of chemical awareness into a new form of capitalism. This?

Or was my Tepehuano
sister in a shawl draped

with rain the answer?
Shawl rain on the concrete—sex kicks

& belly abuse? Madonnas as always,

as bequeathed
from slave time, from Cortés

& his Spanish cock clergy. But this was not Ixtlán or Tepic. This was a Mexican assemblage awaiting to reincarnate into Barbra Streisand on Columbus Street in San Francisco, next to the stripper machines. This was my lost agriculture in neon flesh, in fresh wetness.
